Therefore people cannot have all the goods and services they want; as a result, they must choose some things and give up others. Like individuals, governments and societies experience scarcity because human wants exceed what can be made from all available resources. Choices involve trading off the expected value of one opportunity against the expected value of its best alternative. The choices people make have both present and future consequences. The evaluation of choices and opportunity costs is subjective; such evaluations differ across individuals and societies. Standard 4: Incentives People respond predictably to positive and negative incentives. Rewards are positive incentives that make people better off. Penalties are negative incentives that make people worse off. Standard 15: Growth Investment in factories, machinery, new technology, and in the health, education, and training of people can raise future standards of living. Economic growth is a sustained rise in a nation's production of goods and services. It results from investments in human and physical capital, research and development, technological change, and improved institutional arrangements and incentives. Historically, economic growth has been the primary vehicle for alleviating poverty and raising standards of living around the world. Differences in economic growth are explained by differences in institutional arrangements, incentives to invest and the openness of markets to trade.
